THE RETURN OF PEACE.

By HENRY HOWARD.

Tune—"The Morning Light is Breaking."

O praise the God of Nations,
Praise Him from shore to shore;
Now, grateful, bring obligations,
The faithful strife is o'er.

He is the truest ally,
Who makes us war to cease;
His God preserves our Nation;
Praise Him who gives Peace.

Let the desecrated chalice
Turn all our hearts to Thee,
And through Thy wise dealing,
May all be truly free.

Bliss Thou our wounded heroes,
Curse pride that brought the curse;
True to Thy kingdom make us,
King of the Universe.

O gently soothe the spirits,
That loved the noble dead,
And lightly o'er the shadows,
Let courage ever tread.

Let Freedom's land unite,
For Freedom's land unite,
For Freedom's land unite,
For Freedom's land unite.

With orators and statesmen,
Through darkest hours to cheer,
With mothers, wives and children,
We are with and true prayer.

For man to lead our brave,
The God alone who gave them,
Fill light and love around us,
And all mankind as brothers.

True Him who gives Peace.

BLONDES VERSUS BRUNETTES.

From the creation of the world down to the present times there has been, says M. Auzou de Chancel, in his clever and amusing book "Le Hic et Ha des Blondes," an unceasing struggle between the two antagonistic principles symbolized by the colors dark and fair—blonde and brunette.

Daylight and all that belongs to it, bright flowers and tuneful birds, virtuous thoughts and meritorious actions, loyal friendships and the pure joys of the domestic hearth—these two antagonistic principles symbolized by the colors dark and fair—blonde and brunette.

Among the Greeks the fair style of beauty was that which was most highly appreciated; for it cannot be doubted that the real object of the Argonautic expedition was simply to carry off Medea, the princess with the golden locks; just as in later times all Greece hurried itself against the "Troj to recover the fairest of women, Helen, the wife of Menelaus. The judgment of Paris was the judgment of the fairest of women, Helen, the wife of Menelaus. But even in that favored land it fell to the lot of some women to be born with a dark complexion.
